EXTRACT OF GRADUATION REPORT

January, 1921

THE Massachusetts General Hospital Training School for Nurses has just completed its forty-seventh year. Unlike recent years, it has been a year without war and, comparatively speaking, without epidemic.

The immediate post-war restlessness has passed away. Permanent officials have replaced temporary ones, making the staff more stable.

To the casual observer this year would seem to be rather peaceful and uneventful. In comparison, this is probably true. However, certain hospital activities were necessarily curbed during the war only to speed up now. To those who are responsible for assigning nurses, it seems that never before have medical and surgical staffs held so many clinics, done so much research work, or held so large a number of consultations.

For nearly five years the sons and daughters of this institution were thinking chiefly of what the Massachusetts General Hospital was contributing to the World War. During those years just what happened here at home?

Since August, 1914, the Phillips House has been built and occupied to its capacity of one hundred patients; the Moseley Building, in which is located the Emergency Ward, with its eighteen beds, has been constructed; Wards A and F have been rebuilt, with respective additions of five and six beds; this last fall a second children's ward with thirteen added beds was evolved from the old Treadwell Library. Just before the war period, in 1913, Ward E was reconstructed to an increased capacity of fourteen beds. To summarize, the General Hospital has added fifty-six beds; eight beds were lost by the tearing down of Ward B, leaving a total gain of forty-eight. These building developments mean twenty more posts to be covered by pupil nurses, although, so far, we have assigned only ten pupils to the Phillips House.

While this school has been more fortunate than most others in maintaining its numbers during the prevailing shortage of applicants, it has not altogether escaped. The number of students admitted during 1920 was nine below the number of any other year since 1910. Consequently, with our increased number of beds and a decreased number of pupils, our peace-time problem is not altogether peaceful.

When a hospital is conscious of its responsibility for the education of the pupil nurses, and makes an honest effort to discharge that responsibility, at the same time being almost wholly dependent upon that student body for the care of its patients, a struggle is unavoidable, and sometimes there must, of necessity, be victims of that struggle.

This double responsibility makes a heavy load,—a load which sometimes weighs upon those who carry it until the horizon becomes very limited. Therefore, an occasion like this is welcomed as a time to pull up to the hilltop for a broader view and try to discover the general direction of travel, to locate interesting events, and endeavor to find landmarks of progress.

Stretching away into the distance one can see that army of graduates, now numbering more than fourteen hundred. I cannot recognize and place as many individuals as could my predecessor, but I can see certain changes in the groups and record facts concerning a few of the individuals.

Compared with similar schools, the public health group has been small; but it is steadily growing and now there are seventy-one in this field. The institutional group will always be large because of many reasons. One is the increasing demand made upon us for executives. Many hospitals are ready to expand and improve if they can only find suitable people for the work. Often these requests could more truly be called appeals, so urgent is the need for superintendents and assistant superintendents of hospitals and schools, for instructors and for supervisors of departments.

I referred to the total number of graduates as being fourteen hundred. No tongue could tell the potential number were it possible to count those women who pose as graduates of this school. Seldom has anything so astonished me as this. During the autumn when changes were frequent, it was not uncommon to receive three or four letters each week relative to young women who represented themselves as graduates or as former pupils of this school, but concerning whom no record could be found. Under such circumstances a courteous reply is sent from the office, stating that no record can be found, and asking for further information as to the date when the young woman was in the school, and the name of the superintendent at that time. Reference is made to the question of changed spelling of the name, or the possible use of the married or maiden name. An answer to this letter is seldom received. Last week a reply to the request for further information did come, and the name of the superintendent was given. No person by that name ever held the position. The class specified was 1910, an unfortunate choice, for 1910 happened to be my own class.

An event of the year was the Alumnæ Reunion held September 9th and 10th. These dates were chosen because they came just before the entering of the fall class, thereby making housing accommodations available. Only those graduates whose work is elsewhere realize the full significance of these reunions. On their return, every brick in the great red corridors seems rich with association. Their point of view is such that even the old, undulating passage by the X-Ray Department is almost pleasing; at all events, they know that if they linger there long enough every friend they have in the institution will sooner or later pass that way.

This year has meant the loss of two prominent alumnæ. Their spheres were widely different, their personalities dissimilar; each was a typical representative of her native section, — Miss Scott, a Southerner, Miss Palmer, a New Englander. Scores of graduate house officers and scores of graduate nurses knew Miss Scott. She was Matron of the Convalescent Home at Waverley for thirty years; an administrator and a disciplinarian, but also the possessor of qualities which made that department of the hospital what the name implied, — a place where patients did convalesce, and a place where they did find a home.

Miss Palmer's activities were far afield; first in private duty nursing, during which time she was the first trained nurse to go beyond the Rocky Mountains in a professional capacity; then organizer of St. Luke's Hospital, New Bedford; then she became superintendent of the Garfield Hospital, Washington, and later of the Rochester General Hospital. In 1900, when the American Journal of Nursing was created, Miss Palmer was made its first editor and continued in that capacity until her death last April.

Miss Palmer graduated from this school in 1878, and has been one of the promoters of nearly every progressive nursing movement since that time. Probably no other one of our graduates has had so wide an influence on nursing affairs.

Thus far this report refers only to the graduate body, but they are the standard bearers. It is seldom realized how interdependent are the alumnæ and the school; each has so much to give the other.

This school is an old one; its roots are deep and firmly fixed. For this we are grateful to our predecessors. This history is of no particular credit to us, but rather is it our fine inheritance. Roots are of small account unless that part of the plant which is above ground is having a healthy growth, unless it is pruned where needed and forced where needed. Many an old institution has made the fatal error of living on its past, neglecting the present until too late. That this has not been the fate of the Massachusetts General Hospital Training School for Nurses is to the everlasting credit of the two women who have been at the head of the school during the last decade.

During 1920 probably the most outstanding sign of progress has been the establishing of a fifty-two-hour week duty. Most schools have found themselves victims of an endless chain of circumstances. They could not establish an eight-hour day, because there were too few pupils, and one reason for the few pupils was the too long day. With characteristic courage, Miss Parsons broke the continuity of the circle last February and established the new schedule. There is no doubt but that this has had much to do with our comparatively slight shortage and with the size of the winter class of twenty-six.

In this new group we are welcoming a Czecho-Slovakian nurse, a graduate of a school on the other side, sent by her own government, aided by the American Red Cross, to obtain our diploma and then to go back to establish schools in her own country.

Not long ago it was considered very unwise to have sisters in the same school. What would our conservative friends think if they knew that in this class a mother and her daughter are starting their training together?

The year has been punctuated with more social activities than former years. Not only has there been the time-honored Hallowe'en Party, but an innovation was the song-fest held in the yard. As a result there is now a book of M. G. H. songs. The really formal party was the May Dance. There have been parties to welcome each new section of the entering class, and also parties given by the sections to the instructors. As an accessory to the Alumnæ Bazaar, one group of pupils gave a minstrel show. The Christmas Party has been the most recent social event. In a place all by itself is the Christmas carol singing. For two years a number of pupils have joined Dr. Cabot's carolers in singing on Christmas Eve at the hospital and on Beacon Hill. The thing that cost the greatest effort, and likewise brought the greatest joy, was the singing of carols on Christmas morning for patients and for members of the administration.

The Student Government Association has certainly taken on a full year's growth. It is a satisfaction to have the students appreciate the fundamental principles which are fostered by Student Government.

The year has seen slight changes in the course of instruction. Until this year, chemistry was one of the requirements for admission. However, finding that young women otherwise qualified for this school were entering others, our officers deemed it expedient to add an elementary course in chemistry for those students who had not already studied this subject.

This year the graduates in charge of the medical wards are attending the lectures and clinics and conducting the quizzes on medical nursing; the graduate in charge of the children's department is doing the same with the teaching of pediatric nursing. This means that the nurse who is in daily contact with medical patients is teaching medical nursing, and the graduate in daily contact with sick children is teaching the care of sick children. This scheme also emphasizes the dual responsibility of the head nurse,—that of teacher as well as of administrator.

The preliminary course in practical nursing has long been on a firm foundation. No one can ever say of this school that her students are not taught nursing procedures. The fall class averaged thirty-five. The total number of demonstrations, original and those of practice, given and supervised by the Practical Instructor and her two assistants, was one thousand one hundred and seven.

A report is not a report without a few statistics. Including the pupils due to be capped this week, and the twenty-five probationers who entered January 4th, there are two hundred and eight pupils in the school. Added to this, there are twenty affiliated pupils, making a total of two hundred and twenty-eight. The graduate staff is thirty-three. Of the two hundred and twenty-eight pupils, thirty-eight are on duty away from the General Hospital, ten are at the Phillips House, four at the Eye and Ear Infirmary, two in public health work, and twenty-two away for obstetrics.

The five-year course offered in affiliation with the School of Public Health Nursing at Simmons College has seventeen students. These students spend two years at Simmons College, two in this school, and the fifth year back at Simmons College. The satisfactory completion of this course entitles the student to the degree of B.S. from Simmons College, the diploma of the Massachusetts General Hospital Training School for Nurses, and a certificate of public health nursing.

Having climbed up to the hilltop to look back, it might be well to look forward. One thing for which all hospital people are looking is the report of the Rockefeller Foundation Committee on Nursing. That report is expected to have more effect on nursing education than any other one thing during the last thirty years, with the possible exception of the far-reaching influence of the Department of Nursing and Health at Columbia University.

Training schools need such a survey and they need recommendations. Very few educators are found on hospital or training school boards, or as hospital or school superintendents, but it takes neither a Rockefeller committee nor an educator to make us see two of our future needs.

Even if we were looking through the wrong end of the telescope we could see, first, the need of a staff that would be adequate for the supervision of the practical nursing of the students after the preliminary course is finished. The graduate nurses, under whom the students come after the preliminary course, are so burdened with administrative and secretarial duties that any amount of bedside teaching is well-nigh impossible. Second, the school needs a laboratory of its own, even though simple. We are now using space in the hospital laboratories. This means inconvenience and loss of time for the workers in these departments and for our nurse instructor. Our hosts are polite, but surely our "room is better than our company."

We even dream of a teaching unit. Now our practical classroom is on Charles Street, our laboratory space on Allen, our Diet Laboratory on Blossom, and our theoretical classroom on North Grove. Good exercise for the students, you say. True, were it out-of-doors, but walking through the halls and subways of the hospital buildings is much the same recreation for a pupil nurse as a carriage drive through the countryside would have been for the rural physician of twenty years ago.

After all, it is not a very wild ambition for a school of two hundred and twenty-eight students to wish for more than two full-time instructors, and for at least a part of a building especially designed and adapted for its teaching purposes. Again it is hoped that help will come to those who help themselves, for the Alumnæ of the school have already raised more than ten thousand dollars for its endowment fund; small in comparison, yes, but no mean beginning.

When we say "Endowment Fund" we always think Miss Parsons. To her we owe its inception and its reality.

During the year 1920 the event of greatest moment has been the resignation of Miss Parsons, in fact probably the most momentous event of the past ten years.

There is no time here, nor is this the place, to enumerate the details of that ten years' growth. Probably the fiftieth anniversary of the school, which comes in 1923, will be the most fitting time for the detailed history of this and of other decades.

Every graduate of this school has an inexpressible feeling of gratitude to Miss Parsons for her steady upbuilding of the school. Every diploma of the Massachusetts General Hospital Training School for Nurses, whatever its date may be, is of greater value to its holder because of Miss Parsons' vision and foresight, because of her ability to create, and because her ambition for the school knew no limit.

While reviewing the year we have been up above the grind and the groan of the daily machinery. It is no temptation to linger on these heights after we have accomplished the object for which we came, namely, to look back and to look forward. The air up here is too rare; it is like an overextended vacation. We are glad to come down again to the eternal struggle of tomorrow, confident that we shall still move forward, carried by that indescribable something which for a century has been the impelling force of the Massachusetts General Hospital.

SALLY JOHNSON,
Superintendent of the Training School.

NOTE. Due to the increased cost of printing this Year Book, none will be issued in 1922. The next will be published in 1923, the year of the Fiftieth Anniversary.
